

Everett Freeman Promise Neighborhood

Corning, California

The Everett Freeman Promise Neighborhood serves the children and families in the Corning elementary and high school district attendance areas (750 square miles) in northern California. The Paskenta Band of Nomlaki Indians partners with eight schools and over 25 community partners. Together they provide a continuum of supports focused on early learning, K-12 education, college and career readiness, and family and community well-being.

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

Seventeen-year-old Rebecca often misbehaved, missed school frequently, and hung out with peers who made poor choices. Just as Rebecca was about to drop out of school, she was arrested and decided to participate in Project RESTORE, an 18-week alternative program that offers mentoring, therapy, and other rehabilitative interventions. Weekly meetings with an adult advocate from RESTORE and other supports facilitated by the Everett Freeman Promise Neighborhood have improved Rebecca's conduct and coping skills and motivated her to attend school more regularly. Now she is focused on graduating and says, "Before Project RESTORE, I didn't care. Now I'm a new person. I'm starting a new chapter in my life."
